Travel insurance information

A holiday is a great way to switch of and relax or even experience something new. If you are living with a liver condition, this is even more welcome; it can also come with some extra worries.

Having travel insurance will help you out a lot if you become unwell overseas, it also covers you if you have to cancel your holiday due to your health, if you haven't got travel insurance, these problems can get really expensive.

It can actually be a lot harder for people with health conditions to get travel insurance, it can be very expensive and you may even need to go to a specialist insurance company.

Finding the right insurance

You should always shop around and look for the best suitable travel insurance. Ring the company, get free quotes and read reviews. Make sure that you give them all your details and your medical details, including diagnosis, any medical treatments/surgeries planned. Even if you don't think this will affect your holiday British trust advises you to still talk with the travel insurance company and ask them to explain.

The travel insurance company can refuse to help you if you do not tell them about a medical condition.

As well as comparing prices and reading all the reviews, you should check the policy carefully before you pay for it. If you have a liver condition you should look out for:

- Medical expenses- Your policy should cover you one million pound if you are travelling to Europe and Two million Pound if you are traveling to USA.
- Getting you back home- You should always ensure your travel policy includes getting you home if you are too unwell to travel as planned.
- The excess payment- The excess is the amount of money you pay when you make a claim. Check if the excess is different to medical claims. Also check if you might have to pay the excess more than once.

The British liver trust does not recommend a specific travel insurance company but they do list some (I will attach below) it is a list of companies who offer insurance for people with pre-existing medical conditions. It includes companies that other people living with a living condition have suggested.

But all insurance companies look for different things, So they might not all accept you. And it is always a good idea to shop around for the best option, read reviews too.
